EXECUTING

1. Achiever®

What Is Achiever?

Achievers have a constant need for attainment. They have an internal fire burning inside them. It pushes them to do and achieve more. People with strong Achiever talents feel as if every day starts at zero. By the end of the day, they must accomplish something meaningful to feel good about themselves. And "every day" means every single day: workdays, weekends, holidays and even vacations. If the day passes without some form of achievement, no matter how small, Achievers feel dissatisfied. After finishing a challenging project, they rarely seek with a reward of a rest or an easy assignment. While they appreciate recognition for past achievements, their motivation lies in striving toward the next goal on the horizon.

Why Your Achiever Is Unique

These Strengths Insights are personalized based on your CliftonStrengths results.

Achiever | Includer | Responsibility | Analytical | Arranger

Chances are good that you have labored long and hard to broaden your vocabulary. Your collection features theoretical and complicated words. When using these to write or speak, people automatically conclude that you have official authority over them. Many individuals assume that your elaborate language rightfully places you in a dominant position.

Instinctively, you feel upbeat and cheerful when you keep busy. Without question, you derive much satisfaction from producing tangible outcomes.

Because of your strengths, you work earnestly to manage your money and material resources. Eliminating various forms of waste is one of your personal goals. This probably explains many of your habits for buying, saving, or investing.

It's very likely that you can handle problems, deal with surprises, or overcome obstacles as they arise. Not surprisingly, you have a knack for seeing how each experience fits into the overall scheme of your life.

Driven by your talents, you diligently examine past events. You find patterns that keep recurring. This information allows you to anticipate what can happen in the future. You grasp the meaning of George Santayana's warning: "Those who cannot remember the past are condemned to repeat it."

How Achiever Blends With Your Other Top Five Strengths

ACHIEVER + INCLUDER

Your desire and ability to get everyone on the team involved often ensures that all of the team's work gets done.

ACHIEVER + RESPONSIBILITY

You get things done — sometimes because it feels so good and sometimes because you promised someone you would.

ACHIEVER + ANALYTICAL

Your mind works overtime to understand how something works, and your hands work overtime to get something accomplished.

ACHIEVER + ARRANGER

You are personally productive because of your intense efforts, and you help groups be productive by coordinating others' efforts.

Apply Your Achiever to Succeed

Use a scoring system to keep track of all achievements.

- ☐ Display metrics that matter in a place where you can see them often. The visual measurement of your productivity will encourage you to keep making progress toward your goals.
- ☐ Put personal achievements on your scoring system. This will help you direct your busy energy toward family and friends and work.

RELATIONSHIP BUILDING

2. Includer®

What Is Includer?

"Stretch the circle wider." People with strong Includer talents center their lives on this philosophy. They want to include people and make them feel like part of the group. They notice people who feel like outsiders or who feel unappreciated, and they reach out to bring them in. They instinctively accept others. Regardless of race, gender, nationality, personality or faith, Includers cast few judgments. Their accepting nature doesn't necessarily rest on the belief that we are all different and that one should respect those differences — rather, it rests on the conviction that fundamentally we are all the same. We are all equally important. Thus, no one should be ignored. Each of us should be included.

Why Your Includer Is Unique

These Strengths Insights are personalized based on your CliftonStrengths results.

Achiever | Includer | Responsibility | Analytical | Arranger

Instinctively, you characteristically choose to join groups. You enjoy working alongside others. You appreciate individuals who pull you into casual or formal discussions. You have little, if any, desire to be the person who is in charge of getting everyone talking.

Because of your strengths, you show others that you are friendly when you graciously invite them to join conversations or events you are involved in.

Chances are good that you declare life is very exciting. You welcome opportunities to accept various types of people into your circle of acquaintances, teammates, family, or friends. The more people you have around you, the happier you are.

Driven by your talents, you characteristically find something valuable in what each person says. Then you acknowledge it. You carefully balance the amount of time and attention you give to every individual. You guard against leaving the impression that you think some people are smarter or better than others. Instead, you seek to accommodate everyone's needs and expectations. Because of your efforts, potential misunderstandings and disagreements are kept to a minimum.

It's very likely that you traditionally consider better ways to make strangers or newcomers feel welcome. You are likely to help them fit in and realize they are no longer outsiders.

How Includer Blends With Your Other Top Five Strengths

INCLUDER + ACHIEVER

Your desire and ability to get everyone on the team involved often ensures that all of the team's work gets done.

INCLUDER + RESPONSIBILITY

You are interested in serving those who are marginalized and invisible and who just plain get overlooked.

INCLUDER + ANALYTICAL

You take things apart to improve understanding, and you bring everyone together to increase involvement.

INCLUDER + ARRANGER

To get a really big project done well, you must get everyone involved doing what they do best and enjoy most.

Apply Your Includer to Succeed

Empower people to see the best in others.

- ☐ Help people get to know each other. Your ability to quickly make people feel accepted and involved in a group makes it easier for them to contribute and form relationships.
- ☐ Be aware that existing group members might not initially embrace newcomers, so do your best to explain what we all have in common. Help others understand that to respect the differences among us.

EXECUTING

3. Responsibility®

What Is Responsibility?

People with strong Responsibility talents take psychological ownership of anything they commit to, whether it is large or small, and they feel emotionally bound to follow it through to completion. They keep their promises and honor their commitments. They don't let people down, and they work very hard to fulfill all of their responsibilities and keep their word.

Why Your Responsibility Is Unique

These Strengths Insights are personalized based on your CliftonStrengths results.

Achiever	Includer	Responsibility	Analytical	Arranger

It's very likely that you are regarded as a credible and trustworthy person. This explains why so many individuals value what you say about them and what they have accomplished. Your honesty probably enables people to truly believe in themselves.

By nature, you feel all is well with your life when you can rescue a faltering project. You regularly take on the tasks of others so you know every detail is handled correctly.

Because of your strengths, you aim to do everything with accuracy. You do not want to feel bad about having made mistakes because you hurried through an assignment. You intentionally choose to move at a fixed and measured pace. You need to be the person who sets the tempo of your work and studies. You are determined to control the quality of your results.

Driven by your talents, you automatically work hard to do things properly and ethically. You blame yourself when you fall short of your high standards. Being a solo performer probably frees you to work at a task until you decide it perfectly meets the specifications or aligns with your moral principles.

Chances are good that you are hardwired to do exactly what you said you would do. Your word is your bond. You are likely to earn the respect of many people. You even win over those who have a hard time trusting anyone. Why? You rarely disappoint them.

How Responsibility Blends With Your Other Top Five Strengths

RESPONSIBILITY + ACHIEVER

You get things done — sometimes because it feels so good and sometimes because you promised someone you would.

RESPONSIBILITY + INCLUDER

You are interested in serving those who are marginalized and invisible and who just plain get overlooked.

RESPONSIBILITY + ANALYTICAL

You are a serious person who approaches life reasonably and honorably. You seek truth and speak truth.

RESPONSIBILITY + ARRANGER

When you facilitate the work of others, you feel a strong sense of ownership of both the process and the results.

Apply Your Responsibility to Succeed

Be selective about what you agree to take on.

- ☐ Choose your commitments wisely and focus on the things you genuinely enjoy doing. Prioritize your tasks so they align with your passions so you can perform at your best without feeling stressed out.
- ☐ While you have a reputation for staying true to your commitments, be sure to carefully choose your tasks to protect your wellbeing.

STRATEGIC THINKING

4. Analytical

What Is Analytical?

People with strong Analytical talents challenge others to prove it. They take a critical approach to what others might quickly accept as truth. They search for the reasons why things are the way they are. They want to understand how certain patterns affect one another: how they combine, the outcome and if the result fits with the theory or the situation. Others see them as logical and rigorous. Some might feel that they are negative or unnecessarily critical when they are simply trying to understand something. They bring an objective and dispassionate examination to things enabling them to find the causes and effects, and then developing clear thoughts based on facts.

Why Your Analytical Is Unique

These Strengths Insights are personalized based on your CliftonStrengths results.

Achiever	Includer	Responsibility	Analytical	Arranger

Driven by your talents, you possess the resourcefulness needed to complete whatever you commit to doing. Your ability to reason through things usually helps you find ways around problems and obstacles.

Instinctively, you often spend considerable time examining the details underpinning an idea. Rather than rush through your research, you typically stick with it until you are convinced everything makes sense.

Chances are good that you feel very good about the choices you make as long as they are supported with facts and logic. You probably put aside intuition and emotions when making important decisions about your life.

It's very likely that you carefully evaluate the pros and cons before making weighty decisions. You break situations, ideas, opportunities, or problems into their basic parts. The most appropriate course of action becomes apparent to you only after you have examined every angle, factor, or circumstance. Your methodical thinking process can take considerable time, especially when the subject is an unfamiliar one. You would be wise to tell others the speed at which your mind works. People need to understand how they personally benefit from the time you spend thinking through things.

Because of your strengths, you embrace your ability to examine the large and small elements that comprise events, problems, human interactions, or challenges. You dive into the facts and study the data. You discover the reasons why events are unfolding as they are. You typically break things into their most basic parts. This allows you to understand how each piece contributes or fails to contribute to the overall operation.

ANALYTICAL + ARRANGER

You take puzzles apart to clarify and simplify. You put puzzles together to improve performance.

Apply Your Analytical to Succeed

Find ways to express and put your thoughts into action.

- ☐ Find credible data and facts to help support your thinking. Use these sources of information to reinforce your thought process when talking with others.
- ☐ Provide simple, logical and objective advice to the people that matter most to you. Your ability to uncover the essential facts can transform complex situations into understandable actions.

EXECUTING

5. Arranger®

What Is Arranger?

Arrangers are conductors. When faced with a complex situation involving many factors, people with strong Arranger talents enjoy managing all of the variables, aligning and realigning them until they are sure they have arranged them in the most productive configuration possible. They are shining examples of effective flexibility, whether they are changing travel schedules at the last minute because they found a better fare or are mulling over just the right combination of people and resources to accomplish a new project. From the mundane to the complex, they are always looking for the perfect configuration.

Why Your Arranger Is Unique

These Strengths Insights are personalized based on your CliftonStrengths results.

Achiever	Includer	Responsibility	Analytical	Arranger

Because of your strengths, you derive genuine pleasure from allocating your team's resources to where they are most needed at the moment. You are apt to place individuals in roles, establish a timeline to do tasks, manage the budget, and/or order the materials.

By nature, you prefer to join groups whose work demands absolute precision, accuracy, or completeness. You derive much pleasure from assignments that require the handling of numerous details and the coordination of available resources, such as people, time, money, and materials.

Chances are good that you bring people together by showing them what they have in common. You emphasize the reasons why they can get along with one another. You show them how they can cooperate with one another. You point out how they can each benefit from one another's talents, knowledge, and skills. You probably stress that no one has to do everything or know everything.

Instinctively, you have a much easier time adjusting to situations than many of your teammates do. You probably maintain a macro — that is, big — rather than a micro — that is, tiny — overview of the challenges, problems, or opportunities that lie ahead.

It's very likely that you usually excel on teams whose members appreciate your ability to simultaneously think about multiple ideas, problems, or tasks. The more you have to juggle, the happier you probably are.

5. Arranger

How Arranger Blends With Your Other Top Five Strengths

ARRANGER + ACHIEVER

You are personally productive because of your intense efforts, and you help groups be productive by coordinating others' efforts.

ARRANGER + INCLUDER

To get a really big project done well, you must get everyone involved doing what they do best and enjoy most.

ARRANGER + RESPONSIBILITY

When you facilitate the work of others, you feel a strong sense of ownership of both the process and the results.

ARRANGER + ANALYTICAL

You take puzzles apart to clarify and simplify. You put puzzles together to improve performance.

Apply Your Arranger to Succeed

Help people figure out better ways of working together.

- ☐ Come up with different ways to become more efficient. Look for redundancy and impediments in the processes you follow the most often so you can find new ways of doing them.
- ☐ Look for chances to work in complex, dynamic environments that let you coordinate and develop strategies for getting things done. This will bring out your best.
